Market Commentary

Market Review

The domestic market (Australian All Ordinaries Accumulation Index) 3.4 % November decline follows several months of large movements in equity prices (and predominantly negative moves at that). In a similar vein the 5% fall in the A$US$ exchange rate once again serves to enlarge the impact for offshore investors. The more defensive sectors posted positive returns for the month – REITS (2.6%); Health Care (2.2%) and Telcos (1.9%). Financials (-6.8%); Materials (-6.6%) and Energy (-4.3%) bore the brunt of this month's "risk off" trade.

Global equity markets retreated in November as European sovereign and banking concerns rattled investors giving rise to increased volatility. The volatility will remain elevated until the markets are satisfied that the issues are being adequately addressed. This is not yet the case.

Investment Outlook

Professional investors continue to face an interesting conundrum. From a macro perspective the impact of unsustainable sovereign debt levels in several important economies will limit economic growth for many years. Business confidence remains brittle as banks remain cautious lenders and consumers have rediscovered thrift. Yet, in spite of these negative operating conditions, there are good businesses with competent management and robust balance sheets that are trading profitably in a sustainable fashion. Importantly the share prices of many of these companies do not reflect their superior business models or attractive future cash flows. In our view, the current environment offers significant opportunities to acquire high quality future after tax earnings streams at very attractive prices.

The perception that the European leadership will be unable to resolve the key fundamental issues of unsustainable sovereign debt levels and credit liquidity remains top of mind. This lack of confidence in policy makers has manifested itself in rising European sovereign borrowing costs, sharp sell-offs in listed banking share prices and credit agency downgrades. Credit availability is becoming a real problem as capital providers keep their powder dry until some clarity (and strong leadership) emerges. The impact of a recession in Europe on global economic activity is difficult to assess, and this cannot be helpful to an already shaky global economy

Domestically the economy is feeling the brunt of a combination of several negative factors including poor policy decisions, structural shifts in traditional retail business models, a strong A$ and the pervasive lack of confidence due to the media's obsession with trumpeting the bad news out of Europe. The Reserve Bank's recent interest cuts attempts to shore up domestic demand and the all important residential property prices. It would appear that further cuts may be needed. Many consumer focused businesses are enduring a tough combination of subdued revenues, higher input costs and tighter lending conditions. More recently the revival of militancy in unionised labour force negotiations has added another obstacle for an embattled corporate sector.

However, the recent broad based (and in our opinion – indiscriminate) sell-off by nervous investors has created many attractive investment opportunities for the Fund. We continue to be pleasantly surprised at the range of investment opportunities to acquire high quality companies with solid balance sheets, pricing power and largely economically insensitive business models.

One example of this is our recent acquisition of the Tatts Group providing us with exposure to their portfolio of complementary, high quality, resilient business models with strong cash flows. Post the termination of the Victorian Gaming Machine contract, the company consists of a) an excellent lottery business with a national footprint, b) well placed wagering business with the enviable characteristics of meaningful operating efficiencies due to scale, the lowest cost structure and the ability to monetise an entry into markets representing 80% of the national market, and c) a technology business. The position was acquired on a sustainable after tax earnings yield of 9% with growth.
